Methane Emissions: Innovation Serving Enhanced Monitoring

Since 2022, TotalEnergies has been committed to achieving near-zero methane emissions across its operated Upstream sites by 2030. This ambition is built on two pillars: accurately measuring methane emissions and reducing them. Discover the technological transformation underway across the Company and explore the solutions being deployed, including AUSEA drones, satellite imaging, leak detection and repair campaigns, and permanent continuous monitoring systems.

The Energy Exchange - How Do We Power Our Energy-Hungry World?

As global electricity demand enters an unprecedented phase of acceleration, driven by the electrification of uses and the rise of artificial intelligence, energy systems face a dual challenge: meeting rapidly growing demand while significantly reducing CO_2 emissions.
